BLOOMINGTON.

January 4, 1850.

From the Correspondent.

The abolitionists have little to fear.

The Abolitionists have been in a state of agitation lately, concerning the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case. Many of them believe that this decision will be ruinous to their cause. However, the Abolitionists have little to fear. The decision of the Supreme Court is based on a misinterpretation of the Constitution of the United States, and is contrary to the principles of the Declaration of Independence. The Abolitionists will continue to fight for the abolition of slavery, and will not be discouraged by this recent decision.

The Bygone War!

Lee has been succeeded by Grant. It is a sad day for the South, but the end of the war has come. The South has been defeated, and the Union is safe. The South will never be able to get up again. Lee was a great general, but he could not save the South. The South is done for, and the North is triumphant. The war is over, and the country is free. The South will never forget the brave soldiers who fought for the Union, and the North will never forget the brave soldiers who fought for the South. The war is over, and the country is free. The South will never forget the brave soldiers who fought for the Union, and the North will never forget the brave soldiers who fought for the South. The war is over, and the country is free.

State of Illinois.

The law passed by the State of Illinois will have a great effect on the state's finances. The law will provide for the issuance of bonds to pay for the construction of a new capitol.
