EIGHTH CONGRESS.—On Wednesday last the House of Representatives recommenced its session, and on Thursday, May 12, the Senate, at 10 o'clock A.M. As the President pro tempore of the Senate had not been in the city, the Vice-Presidential of the Senate was sworn in as President pro tempore, and then the Senate went into committee of the whole House of Representatives. The President pro tempore then addressed the House in a few words, and the session was immediately called to order. The House was then adjourned to the 14th instant, at 10 o'clock A.M.

In the meantime, the President pro tempore of the Senate was in the city, and the Senate was in session during the day. The Senate was in session until 2 o'clock A.M. on the 13th instant, and the House was in session until 4 o'clock A.M. on the same day. The Senate was in session until 2 o'clock A.M. on the 14th instant, and the House was in session until 4 o'clock A.M. on the same day. The Senate was in session until 2 o'clock A.M. on the 15th instant, and the House was in session until 4 o'clock A.M. on the same day. The Senate was in session until 2 o'clock A.M. on the 16th instant, and the House was in session until 4 o'clock A.M. on the same day. The Senate was in session until 2 o'clock A.M. on the 17th instant, and the House was in session until 4 o'clock A.M. on the same day.

The Thursday session was called to order by the Speaker of the House, and the House was then adjourned to the 18th instant, at 10 o'clock A.M.
"Abolishism to rule America."

In The New York Times, May 15, 1865, an article titled "Abolishism to rule America." The article discusses the Democratic Party's opposition to the abolition of slavery and the potential consequences if the Democrats were to lose power.

The article highlights the need for the Democratic Party to remain in power to prevent the spread of abolitionist ideas. It argues that the Democratic Party's agenda is one of progress and development, and that the abolition of slavery would hinder this progress.

The article concludes with a call to action, urging Democratic Party members to vote in favor of the current administration in order to maintain stability and progress for the country.