Note: The small strip of land south of Kosciusko and north of Miami and Wabash counties "had apparently been overlooked in the general apportionment of lands." Pence and Armstrong, Indiana Boundaries, 46. Whitley County was not assigned by the Apportionment Act of January 13, 1836. In a statute approved February 6, 1836, Whitley was attached to Huntington County for judicial purposes (Laws, 1836, p. 64), and it is so shown on this apportionment map.

Note: The small strip of land between Brown and Jackson counties was detached from Bartholomew County in 1838 and not attached to Jackson County until 1843.